CPR: Between Life And Death

When you suffer a heart attack, minutes -- especially the first few minutes -- can mean the difference between life and death.

Statistics tell the story: More than 680,000 die in the U.S. each year from heart attack. Approximately half that number die before they reach the hospital. And an estimated 50,000 could be saved if emergency care were available, at the scene and on the way.

This is a fact of life and death doctors must face. And it is a problem the American Heart Association, and the Piedmont Heart Association, are dealing with realistically.

The most immediate approach to saving lives is the Heart Association's training program in cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR). This is a reasonably easily-mastered technique in which someone trained in CPR applies mouth-to-mouth breathing and chest massage to restart the stopped heart in cases of cardiac arrest.

CPR is a first line emergency approach. Hopefully, it will keep the patient alive until more advanced life support -- such as a coronary ambulance or a mobile coronary care unit -- is avilable. Then this advanced life support unit, staffed with trained With the aid of drugs and sophisticated equipment, they maintain life support until the patient reaches the hospital coronary care unit.

It is the Heart Association's belief that each community should be involved in this three-pronged approach to emergency care of heart attack victims: CPR training, an emergency transportation system and well-staffed and equipped hospital coronary care facilities. Many communities already have instituted one or more phases of this program. More than two-thirds of the nation's 7,000 general hospitals have facilities for coronary care.

But providing CPR training for people in all walks of life -- not only medical professionals and emergency personnel -- costs money and manpower. Equipping and staffing a mobile unit is even more expensive. Needless to say, the cost of establishing in-hospital coronary care units has risen sharply.

But money should not stand in the way of programs that can lower the death toll of the nation's Number One killer -- cardiovascular disease. And this is one of the ways the Heart Association spends the dollars you contribute to the Heart Fund.

You can help the Heart Association attain its long-standing goal: the prevention of premature death and disability due to heart disease. Making minutes count is one. Making dollars count is another. And your dollars add up to a long life for all of us -- if heart attack strikes. Give generously when your Heart Fund volunteer calls.

CPR Classes To Begin February 19

The Piedmont Heart Association is presenting cardiopulmonary resuscitation classes open to the public, teaching how to help a person who stops breathing or whose heart stops, until an ambulance or rescue squad arrives. A new class will be held every 3rd Wednesday, starting Feb. 19, 1975 at the Lynchburg General - Marshall Lodge Hospital from 6:30 to 10:30 p.m. Advance registration is required. To register, call the Piedmont Heart Association office at 384-1341 for more information.

The first 4 to 6 minutes after either the heart of breathing stops is the most critical period. Death may be inevitable, but many such people could be revived if someone was there and started cardiopulmonary resuscitaiton.

The Pastor Speaks

LENT

February 12 marks the beginning of Lent. The word "Lent" is a contraction of the anglo-saxon term "lengten-or springtime-when days are lengthening. The season Lent of the Christian year is a period of 40 weekdays of penitential and prayer-filled preparation for the greatest of the Christian festivals, Easter Day. The color in our church is -purple for penance; it is a time for serious thought, for some Christians a time for fasting and prayer, of self-discipline and self-denial. Lent is primarily a time of preparation. Christians can hardly expect to absorb in their souls the rich meaning of an Easter Day (March 30th) without a Lenten preparation. Lent is a 40 day judgment on our priorities, a shattering condemnation of our life style. Lent reminds man that he is sinful, that he is saved by grace, that Jesus Christ suffered the agonies of Calvary for men and four our salvation. Use the 40 day period and the six Sundays of Lent to prepare your soul for a full acceptance of the message of Easter.

The Sunday School Lesson

Comment on the International Sunday School lesson for Sunday, February 16, 1975.

Topic: A Reconciling People

Scripture: 2 Corinthians 5: 16-21; Galatians 3: 27-29; 6: 1-7; Ephesians 2: 13-16; Philemon.

Their is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus. Galatians 3: 28.

A fourth characteristic of the new people, through whom the living God seeks man, as developed in this series of International Sunday School lessons, is that it is a reconciling people. Reconciliation implies that there has been a difference, a disagreement, from which the differing and disagreeing parties are brought together. We speak of onetime friends, who experience divisive disagreement, as being reconciled; of couples, which have become estranged, or being reconciled. In the theological realm, we speak of man, having been alienated from God through disobedience, as being reconciled to God.

Before comment gets into the role of believers as a reconciling people, it should be pointed out that reconciliation is initiated by God. He is the aggrieved party, for man broke the ties of relationship in which he had been created by the Creator-Father through his disobedience. Thus man alienated himself from God. But God in His love for man initiated reconciliation, by which the difference and the disagreement might be bridged. Paul explains this brilliantly in 2 Corinthians 5: 16-21, in which he shows believers their role in reconciliation. "Christ . . . gave us the ministry of reconciliation . . . we are ambassadors for Christ, God making his appeal through us." With equal clarity Christ reconciled us to himself . . . God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself . . .'

There are two aspects to the ministry of reconciliation. First, the believer serves as God's messenger of reconciliation. Paul gives to the believer in this role the impressive title of ambassador. As the ambassador from one nation to another works to reconcile any differences between the two countries and to establish and maintain friendly relations between them, the believer as God's ambassador in an alienated world works to reconcile the alienated people of the world with God and to establish and maintain cordial relations between God and man. "We beseech you on behalf of Christ, be reconciled to God."

The second aspect of the ministry of reconciliation is the exercise of a reconciling agency among men. Not only are people alienated from God; they are alienated from one another. We sometimes refer to the believer's role in this ministry as that of peacemaker. We remember that Jesus said, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called sons of God."

In order to exercise the ministry of reconciliation in both aspects, the believer must see people in proper perspective. Paul puts it, "From now on, therefore, we regard no one from a human point of view." When we regard people from the human point of view, we see them as handsome or homely, as intelligent or stupid, as educated or ignorant, as rich or poor, as well-dressed or shabby, as male or female, as management or labor, as black or white, as American or Russian. When we regard people from the Christian point of view, we see them as God's creation, either redeemed and reconciled or as prospects for redemption and reconciliation. Those who are "in Christ" are "new people," to be seen as regenerated into new life, into the same household of faith.

Peter once described believers as constituting "a royal priesthood," and Christians like to think of themselves as belonging to the priesthood of believers, in which every believer has access to God through Jesus Christ, the great high priest. In the priesthood of believers responsibility does not end with the individual's access to God for himself, but it includes the ministry of intercession for others, may be put in the spirit lesson, the ministry of ation.

He worked a short stint for the Fuller Brush Co. in its early years but takes pride in the fact that he ran the first chain store in Appomattox. Mr. Glenn said he loved to take automobile rides and he said the first thing he remembered in Kansas was the rolling prairies, jackrabbits, the dugout (homes) and the coyotes.

In his early youth, he saw the population of Kansas increase sixfold in two decades. The corn belt had already extended into Kansas, and the state had become an important element in the revolution in meat production.

Meanwhile, being laid were the fortunes of those moguls that shaped a great portion of American history; Rockefeller, Morgan, Weyerhaueser, McCoy, and Armour, to name a few.

A religious Presbyterian, Mr. Glenn said he also loved parades and named John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" as his favorite song.

Mr. Glenn gets his news from among other less formal sources, a large-type weekly paper. He expressed opinions on the following topics: Watergate, "started a long time ago." News (in general) "better have plenty of salt." Richard Nixon, "worse than President Harding," President Fords, "he sure has his hands full. I wouldn't take that job now if they gave it to me." Henry Ford, "he was a smart man . . . for one thing." Franklin D. Roosevelt, "I wasn't any friend of his. What we needed then and still need is a Roosevelt with a big club."

The end of the world--"when the Lord will come back to the earth is all guesswork--something has happened every 2,000 years," he said alluding to certain portions of the Old Testament.

Politicians -- "the words that you should use wouldn't be fit to publish."

Women priests -- "women have just as much a right as a man to be a preacher . . . if it weren't for the women, there wouldn't be too many men."

A nurse overheard Mr. Glenn's comment on women in the priesthood and briefly ducked into the room.

"You're looking real dapper today," she said, admiring this black suit.

"Is that a joke? he quipped.
